Work

WEST ORANGE, N. J., Oct. 21.—Thomas A. Edison beat death by five days to his last great invention, the manufacture of synthetic rubber from goldenrod and other ingredients. Synthetic rubber, it was learned today, was finally proved practical in the wizard's laboratory last Tuesday, even as Edison sank into a stupor and then a coma which ended in his death.

The final series of experiments which ended a 12-year search for a substitute for rubber, under Edison's own direction, were completed by Fred Orr and Charles Dally, both of them associates of the inventor for more than fifty years. This series was merely trying up the process. Edison was almost certain he had discovered the process for its manufacture when he took to his bed on October 2nd, last. He himself had already worked out the method of manufacturing latex, the ingredient which fuses the other elements of the synthesis into a practical and durable rubber suitable to commercial use, but he was worried. Wistfully he wished the successful completion of the invention might be completed before death overtook him.

The experiments of the last great invention were directed from his bed.

$7,700 Collected

SUIT IS NOW DROPPED

MORRISVILLE, Oct. 21.—At last night's meeting of the Morrisville Council, a resolution was passed ordering the payment of $2,212.91 to the State of Pennsylvania, as a compromise settlement in a suit for $7,700 in fines.

The suit was started as the result of a conflict between the State and borough automobile laws. The State law says that a driver may not pass another vehicle unless he has a clear view of at least 200 feet ahead, and borough officials have been arresting and fining autoists who passed vehicles on the hill over the Bridge Street canal bridge.

The State contended that the borough law conflicted with the State law and that they were entitled to the money. Suit was filed in Harrisburg, but never reached court, as the borough engaged lawyers and a settlement was reached.

OF BUCKS COUNTY D. A. R. IN COMMEMORATING THE SACRIFICES OF FORBEARS MADE DURING REVOLUTION

Historical Sketch by President of Bucks County Historical Society Delivered at Unveiling of Tablet on Thompson-
Neely House, Washington Crossing, on Monday

The historical address delivered by Dr. B. F. Fackenthal, Jr., of Riegelsville, president of the Bucks County Historical Society, at the exercises attending the unveiling of a memorial tablet by Bucks County Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, at the Thompson-Neely House, Washington Crossing, Monday afternoon, is herewith set forth:

I consider it a great honor and a distinct pleasure to represent the Bucks County Historical Society at this unveiling, and I cannot too highly commend the patriotism of the Bucks County Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, in erecting this bronze tablet commemorating the deeds of valor and the sacrifices of our gallant forefathers during the greatest crisis of our American history.

This is indeed historic and hallowed ground. Prior to the battle of Trenton, this building, now called the Thompson-Neely house, was the headquarters of Brigadier General William A. Alexander, known as Lord Stirling, one of Washington's most dependable generals. On the staff of Earl Stirling, was Captain William Washington, a kinsman of George Washington. Lieutenant James Monroe, then in his nineteenth year, later to become the fifth president of the United States, (who served in a Virginia regiment,) was conspicuous for his bravery at the battle of Trenton, when in 1777 placed on the staff of Lord Stirling with the rank of major. Captain Washington and Lieutenant Monroe were the only commissioned officers wounded in the battle of Trenton; they were brought back to this house, where they were nursed back to convalescence. Two privates were also wounded in that engagement, one of them, Robert James Livingston, was cared for at the home of Miss Rebecca Coxie in Trenton.

Captain James Moore, of the New York artillery, died here on Christmas Day of 1776, his body lies buried, together with twenty others, heroes all of them, in the burying-ground along the banks of the beautiful Delaware, almost within sight of this house. A marker, with an inscription, has been erected to his memory, but the other graves are indicated on a field of stones. In 1929, the Washington Crossing Park Commission, on behalf of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, erected a substantial marker at that sacred place in memory of these unknown dead. It is gratifying to notice that their graves are not forgotten on Memorial Day, as indicated by the stars and stripes placed over them.

REGISTRATION OPEN FOR STATE COLLEGE CLASSES

Those Desiring to Do So May
Apply at Wood Street
School Today

PLAN MORE COURSES

The Pennsylvania State College, Department of Engineering Extension has announced that it has included Business English and Business Correspondence, and Elementary Accounting in the list of subjects offered in addition to the technical and engineering courses offered in past years.

This has been done as a result of local demand for such subjects.

This will be the third year that the State Institution has conducted classes in Bristol to supply the needs of local men and women interested in furthering their education. Three classes were conducted here last year in technical and engineering subjects. The results were gratifying, and knowledge of them by the Aero Club of Pennsylvania was instrumental in having a request come to the College that such classes be held in Philadelphia for the benefit of men there interested in the aeronautical industry.

Representatives will be at the Wood Street School beginning today, for registration of students. Enrollments can also be made on Thursday and Friday evenings from seven until nine-thirty in the evenings. Classes will begin on November 2nd and will be held on Monday and Wednesday evenings for a period of fifteen weeks.

them; the very emblem for which they gave their lives.

It is doubtless not known to many of you that in 1922 the State Highway Commission in straightening out the River Road, 1.8 miles below Washington Crossing, at a point where the road from Dolington enters the River Road, that a number of bodies were discovered, supposed to have been those of soldiers who lost their lives, by exposure and otherwise, at the Battle of Trenton. Five of these were carefully disinterred and the remains placed in boxes, with the thought of having them interred elsewhere; in fact one member of the commission, now deceased, offered at his own cost and expense to give the matter attention, and also be at the expense of erecting a suitable marker over them, but through some neglect this was not done. I therefore take the liberty of inviting the attention of the present

SCHOOL BUILDING TO BE NAMED "SUMMERSEAT"

Morrisville School Board Decides Upon Official Designation

HISTORIC STRUCTURE

MORRISVILLE, Oct. 21.—"Summerseat" will be the official name of the Osborne mansion which has been restored and is now used as a home economics building of the Public School here. This was the decision of the Board of Education at its last meeting held in the office of this historical old mansion.

The directors before deciding on the adoption of the official name for the building, pointed out that there has been much confusion over the several names used. Thomas Barclay, the original owner of the building, had given the name "Summerseat" to this building when he resided there.

The Board received quotations on a small amount of school furniture added because of the increased enrollment and an authorization was given the committee to make the purchase.

The question of having sidewalks, curb and gutters laid along the school grounds on Hillcrest Avenue was discussed and while it was announced that since this matter has just recently come up there was no preparation made to take care of the cost in the budget for the present school year. The directors decided, however, that since they are anxious to cooperate with Common Council in the matter of improvements the committee on Building and Grounds will attempt to work out a plan with Council so that this matter can be taken care of.

The Board upon the recommendation of the Building and Grounds Committee, voted to ask for bids for the installation of an emergency lighting system in the Robert Morris School as required by the State Department of Labor and Industry. The committee reported its findings as to the various types of lighting the storage battery type.

Although the State Department is demanding the school building be not used at night until the emergency system is installed, the Board has written for permission to use the building for one month more without the emergency lights.

RETURN FROM TOUR OF LANDING FIELDS

Edgar N. Gott and Captain
Lowell Smith Return Home

VISIT A R M Y FIELDS

A tour of many of the foremost Army landing fields in the United States has just been completed by Edgar N. Gott, president of the Keystone Aircraft Corporation, and Captain Lowell Smith, who has been acting as test pilot at the local airplane plant.

The air jaunt, thoroughly enjoyed in one of the Keystone bombers, was a combination of pleasure, business and military service for the two.

After leaving Bristol, and stopping at Langley Field, Virginia, the two turned westward to Dayton, Ohio, where Mr. Gott went on active duty as a Major in the Army Air Corps, for a period of two weeks.

At Scott Field, St. Louis, Missouri, a scheduled stop was made, and then the longest jump took the couple to Hensley Field, in Dallas, Texas. At San Antonio, Texas, three army fields Duncan, Kelly and Randolph, were viewed by the airmen.

The Army Post of Fort Bliss, at El Paso, was on the schedule, and then a day was passed at Tucson, Arizona, where friends of Messrs. Gott and Smith were their hosts. The stop at San Diego, California, was at Rockwell Field. The plane was brought to rest at Riverside March Field, Riverside, California, the point of delivery for this first of 35 Keystone bombers to be sent to the Western coast.

Another airplane was commandeered, and the Bristolians continued their air jaunt to Palmdale, California, where a period of rest at the Gott ranch was indulged in.

Following a visit to friends in Los Angeles, a steamer was used for the journey to San Francisco where the two stopped at Crissy Field. Mather Field in Sacramento held their attention for a brief period, likewise, ending the jaunt of a few weeks. The return trip to Pennsylvania was made by train.

Flying time for the outward journey required approximately 33 hours. The weather proved to be practically perfect for flying, and the entire jaunt was thoroughly enjoyable and profitable. The army fields visited during the four weeks were found to be splendidly equipped.

Investiture Ceremony

Seven new recruits have filed applications and these boys will be received into the troop at the next ceremony, which will take place on the third Monday in November.

The meeting this week was in charge of Eagle Scout Robert Wright, who displayed real leadership ability in his conduct of the troop through the investiture ceremony.

A formal inspection of the troop was held with Deputy Commissioner David Neill officiating, assisted by Scout Wright.

The boys conducted a lively period of games, under the supervision of Junior Assistant Scoutmaster, Melvin Cox, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all present.

Several visitors attended the meeting among whom were two members of the troop committee, Mr. Frank Wright, chairman; and Rev. George E. Boswell.

Next week will be Roosevelt Night, and all members are asked to be present in order to show respect to a great American.

HUGE DREDGE IS TO WORK HERE
IN RIVER CHANNEL

"Jamaica Bay" One of Most Modern Types of Dredges

HAS A CREW OF 65 MEN

Will Dredge Canal and Lehigh
Ranges in Delaware
River

One of the three powerful dredges which have been working in the upper Delaware in the deepening of the channel, will start work on the Canal and Lehigh ranges, here, at Bristol today—it is expected.

The "Jamaica Bay," one of the most modern dredges, and owned by the Standard Dredging Company, of New York, arrived here yesterday, and anchored opposite the Mill street boat wharf. Pipe lines are being laid to the basin, to carry the material dredged from the channel, into the abandoned basin.

The second of the trio of super dredges, the "Pittsburgh," is expected to start work shortly on the Bristol range also. The Hill Dredging Company, which took over the uncompleted contract of the Trimont Dredging Company, finished its work at a point off the Huntington Island wharf. That is all the work which the dredges owned by this particular company were able to do.

The "Pittsburgh," which is owned by the Atlantic Gulf and Pacific Company, of New York, will cover the channel from Bordentown to Bristol, clearing up the material which the Hill Company was unable to remove with its equipment.

It is expected that approximately 240,000 cubic yards of material will be removed from the Canal and Lehigh ranges, with about 10,000 cubic yards of this amount being taken from the Canal Range.

The "Pittsburgh" will dredge the ranges known as Florence, Church, Foundry, Riverview, Landreth, and Keystone. About 200,000 cubic yards come from these ranges.

There will remain the work to be done on the Edgewater range and Mud Island range, with about 80,000 cubic yards to be taken from the former, and 84,000 cubic yards to be taken from the latter. It is expected that the work will be completed in about 32 calendar days.

The "Jamaica Bay" took anchorage off Mill street yesterday afternoon, and her crew began the laying of pipe lines, but the actual work of dredging will not be started due to the fact that the contract has not been actually awarded by the government. Bids were opened October 15th.

The character of some of the material being taken from the channel ranges all the way from small pebbles to good-sized boulders, with some clay. It can only be pumped to shore by the most powerful type of hydraulic dredges, and the government makes every effort to get contractors with suitable equipment to handle the work. The "Pittsburgh" has 4,200 horsepower steam turbines and uses 300 barrels of fuel oil per working day of 24 hours. The Pittsburgh pumps the material ashore through a 27-inch pipe line, averaging about 8,000 cubic yards every 24 hours. Captain Miles has a crew of 82 men and operates the dredge six 24-hour days in the week, stopping only Sundays. This is the finest dredge in the country.

The dredge "Jamaica" owned by the Standard Dredging Company of New York has 1,800 horse-power Diesel engines with a 26-inch diameter pipe line. Captain Charles Anderson has a crew of 65 men and is pumping ashore 5,000 cubic yards every 24 hours.

Dredge No. 5, belonging to W. H. Gahagan, Inc., of New York is captained by Mr. Anderson and has a crew of 65 men.

Bel Telephone Company's crews today began removing the telephone cable from the river channel here during the period of the dredging. The cable will be floated on bays and moved from time to time out of the path of the dredge.

Mill Street Business Men

Inasmuch as all Mill street merchants could not attend the meeting last night, it was decided to name committees to visit the absentees and interview them upon the plan.

L. C. Wetling was named general chairman over a group of committees.

EDISON

People are interested in the progress being made in prolonging human life not so much out of Me-thuselahian aspirations as out of the dread of losing through death the few great men in every generation. That is the greatest tragedy of this life.

There was Thomas A. Edison, who is buried today. Life produced him and developed him into the greatest inventor and scientific explorer of all time, only to have death end his humanitarian labors and snatch him away from their rewards. Though such tragedies are commonplace for mankind the world cannot reconcile itself to them.

Edison was not an ordinary inventor. His inventions and scientific discoveries were not accidental. Every laboratory success was paid for with endless hours of tedious toil and study; every invention was his answer to some human need.

Other men may have contributed more to the health and safety and mental advancement of mankind but none contributed so much to its comfort and enjoyment. His genius was not inspired into action by the desire to do the impossible but by the hope of applying certain known but unemployed principles to useful work.

There may never be another Edison. He stood alone in the world of invention because of his rare versatility. While others confined their efforts to one invention or one field of invention he worked in all fields from the incandescent lamp to synthetic rubber. His greatest genius lay in that very versatility.

The sad thing about having a wife is she is always wishing her husband would be more sensible or more foolish.

There are two ways to train a child: Give it a good example, or set a bad example that gives it a pain in the neck.

FOOLISH FEELINGS

"The CZARINA'S RUBIES"

by Sidney Warwick

READ THIS FIRST

The famous and sinister Czarina Rubies belong rightfully to Katharine Faring, granddaughter of a Russian prince. Her friend Frank Severn recovers them for her in Russia and sends Paul Federoff to England with them. Federoff is murdered at Monksilver, an empty country house owned by Severn, but the killers fail to find the gems.

Severn is kidnapped and carried unconscious to Monksilver, too, and there his friend, Jim Wynter, finds Croyke, Severn's servant, stabbed to death. He enters the house, is injured in a fight and then drugged and taken to the home of a Dr. Martell, who revives him. Wynter returns to Monksilver with his friend Sant and his police.

NOW GO ON

CHAPTER XXI

The car proceeded up the neglected tree-lined avenue. Touched by the waning afternoon sunlight, the old house that a bend of the drive brought suddenly into view looked very different from when he had seen it last, dark, lonely and forbidding. Mellow with its century-long life, not without a certain dignity and charm, Monksilver might have struck most eyes pleasingly enough; for Wynter, touched to a sudden shiver by a grim memory as it broke on his eyes, it was a sinister place, repellent with its clinging atmosphere of evil.

They came out into the open graveled sweep by the house. But something he had expected to see among the trees bordering it was no longer there. No sign of the car, no sign of its driver whom last night he had found dead at the wheel.

"So they drove the car away again," exclaimed Wynter—not that that was really so very surprising. He suddenly wondered if it were that same car that had taken a drugged man to Dr. Martell's house. "But Croyke—did they drive the dead man away with them?"

"And yet they troubled to padlock the gate again after them!" remarked Sant drily.

SKEPTICAL

The inspector had jumped down from the car, and he and his man were scouring the strip of woodland for any trace of the reported crime. Sant's eyes followed them, as if with an amused incredulity that there had been any crime at all outside the imagination of a drugged brain.

He stroled over to the front door. Across the open graveled space Jim Wynter saw him make a sudden flicking movement or two with his handkerchief as he stood within the shallow rose-tinted porch. Sant turned abruptly and called to him.

"You went into the house last night and by this door, didn't you, Wynter?" he asked noncommittally.

"Of course, I did," Wynter retorted good humoredly. "You old skeptic, I know you fancy I dreamed it all. But it's nevertheless a fact."

"Well, just come here and look at this door," came Sant's booming voice. "You must admit, my dear chap, that it hardly looks as if it has been opened as lately as last night. What about those cobwebs I've just had to brush away?"

He pointed with a little air of triumph. There were long floating gossamer filaments that had cobwebbed the corners of the porch and the doorway where Sant's handkerchief had flicked them loose; spider webs certainly not spun, as Wynter realized, within the last fourteen hours—ancient dusty webs.

What do you say, Grayson? Hardly looks to me as if that door could have been opened last night without breaking those cobwebs! I found cluttering up porch and doorway," Sant said with a humorous twinkle in his eyes. "Weeks of cobwebs, if I'm any judge!" Bill Grayson gazed at the broken, waving gossamer threads with a judicial eye.

"Well, just come here and look at this door," came Sant's booming voice.

"I confess it does look as if that door couldn't have been opened so very lately."

"There's counsel's opinion for you, Wynter!" cried Sant with his boisterous laugh. "Now what about it?"

Wynter laughed too—perhaps his laugh was a little grim. He would have been only too glad to have been able to believe he had merely imagined that crime of last night. He knew he had not imagined it. He knew that he had seen Croyke dead in the car, had passed through the door cobwebs or not, last night.

"Oh, I don't profess to explain them—or if those cobwebs, after being broken last night, could in any way have been attached again (improbable, I admit) in order to lend just the impression that they've conveyed to you," he said.

And Wynter shrugged his shoulders.

CUNNING PLOT

"One thing I do know. We're up against a deep, cunning plot," he went on. "Sant, what if these men wanted my story of a murder here to be discounted, just the delusion of a man coming out of a drugged sleep? Deliberately planned it when they drove me miles away from this house? Croyke will have disappeared, of course—still, if the dead man is never found, what proof of a murder beyond the word of a man whose drugged brain may have played him a trick, Sant, you have the key. Open the door, will you? I want to show you something."

The inspector had come up from a futile search of the narrow web of trees, as Sant with a puzzled glance at Wynter's face inserted the key.

The door opened on the wide hall that had been deep in shadow when Wynter had seen it before. The afternoon light revealed the shabby stair-carpeting that perhaps had been left in this empty house to protect the fine polished oak of the staircase.

Wynter's eyes wandered to the strip of carpet stretching downward from the edge of the bottom step to the floor, there to be held in place by its brass rod. Was there the faintest bulge in that pocket-like fold of star carpet?

THE PEARL NECKLACE

"Bill," Jim Wynter said suddenly, as if inconsequently, "you remember that last night at the Hildrens' Milly lost her jade and pearl necklace?"

"Why, yes, of course." The question surprised Grayson. "And it didn't turn up again, worse luck." "Oh, Milly needn't worry. I forgot to tell her just now, but I had the luck to find it," Wynter responded. "It was in my pocket when I got knocked out in this house, on those stairs."

Sant and the others were staring at him, puzzled. Wynter crossed to the foot of the stairs; he stopped and touched the spot where the carpet betrayed that faint bulge between the bottom step and the floor. It had proved a secure hiding place!

"I had just a moment and enough falling strength left before consciousness went to slip that necklace into safety behind this fold of the carpet," he explained. Bill, I fancy you'll find it still there. You might identify it for me!"

Bill Grayson stooped, thrust a hand behind the carpet. A necklace of white jade and pearls gleamed in his hand. Wynter looked across at Sant.

"You see, I must have been here last night," he said quietly—"and it was through that door I came. We have only to telephone to Beggar's Court to learn that Croyke did not return last night or this morning."

Sant drew a deep breath. The round, humorous face was startled and grave enough now.

"I apologize, Wynter. You've convinced me. So poor Croyke was murdered here!"

There was a moment's pause. Then Sant broke out vehemently: "My God! What does it mean? Who are these sinister shadows of men were up against? Croyke murdered and spirited away and Frank Severn vanished, too, in the power of these murderers."

STATE NEWS

LEBANON.—A tract of land which will eventually become part of the new Military Reservation in the Blue Mountains north of here was taken over by the state at an outlay of $2,800.

The tract contains 195 acres and 32 perches and title to it was obtained from Mr. and Mrs. Harvey H. Nissley, of Lancaster county. It is estimated that the National Guard camp will be established on the new site within a few years.

It is situated in the Inwood and Indiantown Gap region and is believed to be naturally adapted to the use which it will be put to later.

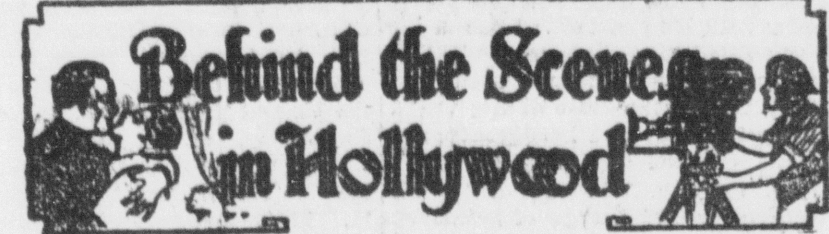

Adjutant General David J. Davis, of Scranton, was in Lebanon to take part in the negotiations for the transfer.

The tract's location on a public road is said to make it particularly desirable for a camp site, since other places on which the State has options would require the building of new roads leading to them.

LEWISBURG.—Six sub-contractors are employing scores of men on the construction of the new Federal penitentiary near here.

Work is being rushed on the foundations and other stone and cement work in order to get it well advanced before freezing weather sets in.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Oct. 20.—

Motion pictures and the stock market have made Rod La Rocque a rich man. Today, in semi-retirement, he devotes his time to scientific work.

Rod is no dilettante, either. The famous Dr. Robert Millikan is his good friend. Many distinguished men of science are guests at his home.

Right now Rod is building a telescope for Conrad Nagel's little daughter, Ruth. Within the last six days he has spent 84 hours and 20 minutes grinding the speculum, which will magnify 192 times. Before the instrument is finished, an ordinary Ford axle will be put to use in some mysterious fashion.

This is the fourth telescope Rod has made. One similar to his present model is set up at his mountain cabin.

The mechanics of photography are another hobby of Rod's. He builds cameras as handily as the average man changes film.

Vilma Banky, now completely resigned to retirement from pictures, helps in the laboratory. She is an expert at handling a wood-lathe.

It is rather remarkable that Rod has educated himself in science. In his boyhood, lack of money prevented him even from finishing high school.

Would he like to go back into pictures? Perhaps. But in the meanwhile, he has his hobby to rescue him from boredom.

PROFESSIONAL PRIDE. They are telling about a panhandler who asked a Hollywood actor to give him a dime for toffee.

Just as he reached into his pocket, the actor looked across the street and saw a sign: "Coffee, 5 cents." He handed the man a nickel and pointed to the sign. "You won't need a dime," he said.

Washington Crossing Park Commission, the personnel of which has changed since then, to this condition, and trust that the original thought may be carried out. Why not bury them in that sacred place along the Delaware, by the side of their comrades, who like them fell unwept and unknown, in aiding to establish this great nation.

Here in this Thompson-Neely house, the only headquarters on the immediate banks of the Delaware at that time, came General Washington to confer with his generals. Some of his letters dated "Camp above the Falls," are thought to have been written from here, although the same dating would also apply to his own headquarters at the Kieth house.

Lord Stirling, who was quartered here, had special charge of gathering boats for the crossing. He delegated the detail of that work to Generals Mercer, Stephen and DeFermoy. Boats from up the river were assembled and secreted along the Pennsylvania shore back of the Island, situated about midway between here and Corvill's Ferry, now New Hope, one and one-quarter miles from each place, and about six miles above the place of crossing at McKonkey's Ferry. On Christmas Day the boats were dropped down and moored back of Lowndes, now Taylor Island, just above the ferry. There is no record to show where the boats from Beatty's Ferry and other places south of the crossing were assembled.

Brigadier General Hugh Mercer took an active and conspicuous part in the Battle of Trenton. He was also in the second engagement at Trenton, often referred to as the Battle of Assunpink. He was in the van of that strategic march from Trenton to Princeton, and in the engagement at Stony Brook on January 3, 1777, was mortally wounded, dying of his wounds nine days later on January 12th. He was, I believe, the ranking officer to fall during the entire Jersey campaign.

From December 8 to 14, 1776, Washington made his headquarters in the Thomas Barclay house, now known as "Summerseat," lately the Osborn house in Morrisville, Bucks County. It was later the home of two signers of the Declaration of Independence; Robert Morris and George Clymer. From December 14, until the Battle of Trenton, Washington was quartered at the Kieth house on the southern slope of Jericho Mountain, in the adjoining township of Upper Makefield, about 2.4 miles westward from the Delaware, near the public road leading from Brownsburg to Wrights town. Brownsburg is on the Delaware River about 3.7 miles north of Washington Crossing. The Kieth house, substantially built of stone, was appropriately marked January 1, 1897, by the Bucks County Historical Society; but the headquarters of three Major Generals near the Kieth house, lying on the southern and western slopes of Jericho Mountain, are not marked. As these are all within the jurisdiction of the Washington Crossing Park Commission, it is to be presumed that in due time they will receive attention.

By the unveiling of the tablet placed on this shrine today by our sister society, an inspiring and patriotic example has been set, particularly to those of us who are members of the Sons of the American Revolution. I am advised that the Pennsylvania Historical Commission stands ready to place markers on any of these historic buildings.

The headquarters to which I have referred are the Hayhurst house, that of General John Sullivan; the Merrick house, that of General Greene; on whose staff, as an aide, was Thomas Paine, said to have written there the first installment of his "Common Sense," beginning with these words: "These are the days that try men's souls," which was ordered to be read at the head of each regiment. The Dr. Chapman house, that of General Henry Knox, on whose staff was Captain Alexander Hamilton, later to become Washington's Secretary of the Treasury, and his most trusted friend and adviser, and the father of our decimal monetary system of dollars and cents. During those trying and strenuous days in the formation of our government, Hamilton as a statesman, was "the noblest Roman of them all."

General Davis, who founded the Bucks County Historical Society, invites attention to the fact that no battle was fought within the borders of Bucks County; it is thought, however, that part of the skirmishing at the Battle of Crooked Billet, now Hattboro, was forced over the line into Bucks County.

There are many headquarters of Washington and his generals, and places of their entertainment in Bucks County, very few of which are marked. However one of the most historic of these, the Moland house, Washington's headquarters on the Little Neshaminy on the Old York road in Warwick Township, about half a mile north of Hartsville, then called Warwick Cross Roads, was marked in 1897 by the Bucks County Historical Society. Washington rested there on the night of July 31, 1777, and returned to make it his headquarters from August 10 to 23, 1777, a longer time than at any other encampment in Pennsylvania, with the exception of White Marsh and Valley Forge. He remained there with his army to study the movements of the enemy, supposing that Admiral Howe, with his fleet, was planning an attack on Philadelphia.

Washington's army, variously estimated at from 11,000 to 13,000 men, was encamped on the banks of the Neshaminy nearby, and there they saw the newly designed flag, with its stars and stripes, unfurled for the first time. There with Washington, on the banks of the Neshaminy was the tent of John Marshall, Captain of Infantry in General Maxwell's brigade, who later became Chief Justice of the United States, and the expounder of our Constitution, who died sixty years later on July 6, 1835, and at whose burial July 8, 1835, the Liberty Bell was tolled, receiving at that time its primary fracture.

The Marquis de Lafayette, who arrived in Philadelphia from France July 27, 1777, was on July 31, commissioned by congress as a major general; on the following day August 1st, he accompanied Washington on a tour of inspection around Philadelphia harbor. On August 15, he presented his credentials to General Washington at the Moland house, on the banks of the Neshaminy, and there joined the army. Nineteen days after breaking camp on the Neshaminy, viz.: on September 11, 1777, General Lafayette was wounded at the Battle of Brandywine. He was taken to Bethlehem, where he was cared for and nursed back to convalescence by the Moravian sisters. He left Bethlehem October 18, 1777, and at once rejoined Washington's army where he did splendid service down to the close of the war, being present at the surrender of Yorktown.

I will not, at this time, give you a chain of title to the tract of land on which these buildings stand. I will, however, state that the tract was known by the Indian name of Win-an-haw-caw-chunk. It is in Solebury township, with Upper Makefield as its southern adjoinder, and is part of what was known as the Manor of Highlands. It contains 400 acres, with allowances. It appears that the tract or part of it was claimed by Thomas Rowland as part of a warrant of survey granted to him in 1681 by William Penn. On September 9, 1690, the heirs of Thomas Rowland deeded certain property to Gilbert Wheeler, who supposed it included this tract. It further appears that John Pidcock came to America as an indentured servant of Gilbert Wheeler, and in 1684 took squatter possession of the tract, which he improved and thereon established a trading station. This settlement gave him a good title to it against any one except the Penns. There was some litigation between Wheeler and Pidcock in regard to the title, or to establish lines between their properties, which the courts of Bucks County decided in Pidcock's favor, and to clear his title Wheeler by deed dated March 1, 1701, conveyed the entire property to Pidcock. Immediately after having his title confirmed, John Pidcock built the first section of this house, little dreaming that it was destined to become an important shrine, revered by all lovers of liberty.

The original gristmill, of which the one now being restored is the third, was located down near the river. It was built by John Simpson, who then occupied the Thompson-Neely house. One of the mills was destroyed by fire; the other torn down when the canal was built.

Robert Thompson was a journeyman miller employed by John Simpson, and on the death of Simpson, he married his widow, and was in possession of the property at the time it became the headquarters of Lord Stirling. Robert Thompson had the reputation of never turning a poor man from his mill with his bag empty, whether he had money or not.

William Neely emigrated from Ireland, where he was born August 31, 1742. On June 21, 1766, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Thompson, and shortly thereafter took charge of the gristmill. Neely was in charge of its operation at the time of Washington's encampment, and here he ground grain for the Continental army. He did not however own the property until after the death of Robert Thompson, which occurred June 18, 1803. By his will, Robert Thompson, devised the gristmill and plantation to his daughter, Elizabeth, and her husband, William Neely.

This tract, aside from its Revolutionary lore, has a most interesting history. The mountain so prominently in evidence, on which the Washington Crossing Park Commission has erected the observation tower, 200 feet above tide, is known as Bowman's Hill, so named after Dr. John Bowman who built his cabin at its base, and by request was buried on its summit. On the north slope there is located a so-called copper mine, operated in colonial times, discovered and reopened in 1854, and again reopened by prospectors in 1864.

As already stated Pidcock was in possession of the tract by right of "settlement," whose possession could be disturbed only by the Penns. Taking advantage of this condition certain Philadelphia and Bucks County capitalists, viz.: Hon. James Hamilton, then Lieutenant Governor of Pennsylvania; Chief Justice William Allen; Lawrence Growden, recorder of Bucks County; Langhorne Biles; William Plumstead and Joseph Turner, on July 17, 1752, with the connivance of Robert Thompson, secured a transfer of the old warrant, and on January 18, 1753, a patent was granted to William Coleman, in trust for their use and benefit. Six months later, on June 18, 1753, William Coleman deeded the property, by six separate conveyances, to the aforesaid six gentlemen, as Tenants in Common, and they on the following day, June 19, transferred the fee to Robert Thompson, reserving however, for their own use all mines and minerals, including copper, lead and iron. The object of these gentlemen appears to have been to get possession of the old copper mine, and of Robert Thompson, who had possession only by courtesy, to get absolute possession in his own name, in order that it might not go to the heirs of John Simpson.

There is a tradition that the copper mine had been worked in prehistoric times by the Indians.

The six deeds from William Coleman are not recorded, but three of them fell into my hands, viz.: those to Lawrence Growden, Langhorne Biles and Joseph Turner, which on July 15, 1920, I deposited in the library of the Bucks County Historical Society. As these three deeds belong to me, I will take the liberty, as president of the Bucks County Historical Society, of withdrawing them from its archives, and presenting them to the Washington Crossing Park Commission, for deposit in the Thompson-Neely museum. These deeds have special value. They are witnessed by William Peters and George Clymer, the latter one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. His autograph signature is plainly written and well preserved. The deeds are signed by the grantor, William Coleman, who was a close friend of Benjamin Franklin. In 1727, Benjamin Franklin founded a literary club in Philadelphia, called "The Junto," and in estimating the character and worth of its members, as contained in his autobiography, has this to say of William Coleman:

"Lastly William Coleman then a merchant's clerk, about my age, who had the coolest, clearest head, the best heart, and the exactest morals of almost any man I ever met with. He became afterwards a merchant of great note and one of our provincial judges. Our friendship continued without interruption to his death, upwards of forty years, and the club continued almost as long."

Today is the first anniversary of the Bucks County Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, therefore allow me, ladies, to thank you for the dignity and glory you have added to the history of our beloved county.

This day has also been wisely chosen for this unveiling, as it is also the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, practically ending hostilities, which had raged for exactly six years and eight months, from April 19, 1775, when that resolute band of 130 "Minute Men," hurriedly gathered together at Lexington, Mass., under command of Captain John Parker, was attacked by British troops from Boston. There were more casualties in that skirmish than in both battles of Trenton. Brave Captain Parker and eight of his men fell dead, and a number were wounded. On the commons at Lexington where these brave heroes fell, a monument has been erected to their glory, and on a granite marker nearby, there is inscribed these patriotic and cautious words of command issued by Captain Parker to his men on the approach of the British regulars: "Don't fire unless you are fired upon, but if there must be war let it begin right here."

And even now as we are assembled here in this quiet valley on the banks of the Delaware, the field at Yorktown is being dedicated as a National Park. The scenes on the James river are being reenacted in pageantry with more than 4,000 taking part, with the President of the United States, members of his cabinet, senators and representatives, the governors of the thirteen original states, the head of our army with his staff, Marshal Pétain and others come over from France, the present Lord Cornwallis come over from England to represent his illustrious ancestor; Baron DeKalb, a descendant of Baron DeKalb, and Major Fritz von Steuben, a great-grandson of Baron von Steuben come over from Germany, and many other distinguished guests and citizens to the number of many thousands, in attendance. Provision has been made for parking 20,000 automobiles.

I have always been thrilled on reading of the manner in which the surrender of Cornwallis was conveyed to the officials and citizens of Philadelphia.

Yorktown fell October 19, 1781, but it took Col. Tilghman, the express rider sent by Washington, four days to reach his destination. He arrived in Philadelphia about midnight of the twenty-third. It was the duty of the watchmen, who patrolled the streets at night to call out the time of day and the character of the weather, but on the morning of the twenty-fourth, the watchmen changed their cry, and sang out:

"Three o'clock in the morning and Cornwallis is taken."

The streets were soon thronged with people eager to learn details of the good news, and the state house bell rang out for gladness.

This was the same General Cornwallis who trailed Washington, our modern Fabius, through New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and who on dining with Washington after the surrender, said to him:

"When the illustrious part that your excellency has borne in this long and arduous conflict becomes matter of history, fame will gather your brightest laurels rather from the banks of the Delaware than from those of the Chesapeake."

Where Turkish tobacco comes from Eastward ho! Four thousand miles nearer the rising sun—let's go! To the land of mosques and minarets—so different from our skyscrapers, stacks and steeples.

Let's see this strange, strange country. Let's see the land where the tobacco* grows in small leaves on slender stalks—to be tenderly picked, leaf by leaf, hung in long fragrant strings, shelter-dried and blanket-cured. Precious stuff!

Let's taste that delicate aromatic flavor—that subtle difference that makes a cigarette!

XANTHI . . CAVALLA . . SMYRNA . .

SAMSOUN . . famous tobaccos!

*Turkish tobacco is to cigarettes what seasoning is to food—the "spice," the "sauce"—or what rich, sweet cream is to coffee!

You can taste the Turkish in Chesterfield—there's enough of it, that's why. Chesterfield has not been stingy with this important addition to good taste and aroma; four famous kinds of Turkish leaf—Xanthi, Cavalla, Samsoun and Smyrna—go into the smooth, "spicy" Chesterfield blend.

This is just one more reason for Chesterfield's better taste. Tobaccos from far and near, the best of their several kinds—and the right kinds. And pure, tasteless cigarette paper, the purest made. The many requisites of a milder, better smoke, complete!

That's why they're GOOD—they've got to be and they are.

In every important tobacco-growing center of Turkey, Chesterfield has its own tobacco buyers on the spot

DARKER SHADES TAKE HONORS IN HOSIERY FOR WEAR IN FALL

Tans, Turtle-Dove, and Other Gray Undertones Are Preferred

By ALICE LANGELIER

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS, Oct. 21—Turtle-dove tan brown shades are taking all the honors in the stocking line this autumn, emphasizing a decided turn toward darker leg covering for winter.

Tans with gray undertones are putting the once-popular putty and sand tones in the background. Yellow tones, if any, of the beige shades, predominate over the pinky ones.

There is a definitely darker note in the light cobweb stockings for evening wear. A dark beige, a grey of gunmetal suggestion and a grey with mauve tinge will all be worn after dark in Paris this year.

Browns are warm and dull in tone, some of them a very decided seal shade. There are also very dark shades of grey, verging on black and some very dark blues. Very reddish brown is not as popular in spite of the fact that this is a favorite autumn shade. Pure greys too, are in the minority. Light pearly tones and a very pale quality suggesting a film of smoke are good for certain gowns. An off-white tint has a hint of champagne coloring, but all these are the lighter exceptions to the very dark stocking rule for fall and winter.

SOCCER TEAM TO OPEN SEASON HERE SUNDAY

Through the courtesy of the Bristol A. A. football team, in their efforts to help promote sports, the Fawley F. C. soccer team, formerly of Croydon, will now play on Sullivan's Field, Bristol, under the name of Fawley F. C. of Bristol.

The first game on the new field will be played Sunday, October 25, with the German-Hungarian Sport Club, of Philadelphia, as the visiting team. This will be a First Division National League game and as the Germans are leading the league, topping Fawley by two points, a great game will be witnessed.

In the season just passed, the Fawley team won the Second Division National championship and in a play-off captured the Second Division city championship by defeating Light-house, incidentally making the first time in the history of the league, over 25 years, that this championship has ever left Philadelphia.

Forced up into faster company, the Fawley team is now in line to bring the First Division cup to Bristol, the highest honor obtainable in American soccer.

The management of the Fawley F. C. wishes to take this means of thanking the Bristol Courier for their advertising and the following business men of Bristol for their financial help in bringing this team to Bristol: Gallagher & Gallagher, Moffo Bros., Singer Bros., Marty Green, Joseph Lasky, Charles Powell and Marvin W. Collins.

All lovers of continuous action and thrills are urged to go to Sullivan's Field, Sunday, October 25th, at 3.15, where ninety minutes of fast action will be supplied.

Stop Night Coughing

Night coughing is almost always caused by an irritated, inflamed throat; so is almost all coughing. Ordinary cough syrups do not reach these conditions, but Thoxine, a prescription exclusively for throat troubles, does. It relieves the irritation and the cough stops within 15 minutes. And Thoxine goes further, too. It eliminates the internal cause which many times develops into serious illness.

A swallow of Thoxine before retiring absolutely prevents night coughing and insures a good night's sleep. It gives the same speedy relief for sore throat, too. It contains no chloroform or other harmful drugs, and children like it. Relief is guaranteed within 15 minutes or money back, 35c, 60c, and $1.00 bottles. Sold by: Cameron's Drug Store, and all other good drug stores.—(Adv.)

Youth Is Being Served

By HARDIN BURNLEY

ALSO DON'T FORGET HELEN HICKS.

© 1931, King Features Syndicate, Inc. Great Britain rights reserved.

WITH tempestuous "Bill" Tilden burning up courts as a tennis pro but no longer eligible for those glamorous amateur championships, 19-year-old Ellsworth Vines beams modestly as the 1931 national champ. In golf as "Old Master" Hagen putts towards the Valhalla of Vardon, Ray and other former greats—boyish Tom Creamy (he's only 20) won the American professional golfers' title last month from a big field of the ablest links talent.

Was it "The Hag," Gene Sarazen, "Wild Bill" Mulholland, Tommy Armour or some other experienced master in that tournament who pushed Creamy to the limit? No, his rival in the final was the youthful Denmore Shute. The incomparable Bobby Jones was referee of that match, and afterward that most competent and conservative critic spoke highly of the play of each. Until his triumph at Providence, R. I., Creamy was not known as a crack golfer. His chief claim to fame up to then was that he had given links instructions to New York's beloved "Al" Smith.

Two years ago last June, Shute had a good chance to win the U. S. Open at Wing Foot, but he cracked a bit on his last round. This time he and Creamy were figured to yield under the fierce strain of four-day, topnotch match play, but instead, they stood up far better than the vets under that hot fire and went on to fight it out between themselves.

Of course, there's always the chance that a tennis or golf prodigy will prove but a flash in the pan. To win a big title at 20, 21 or less lays a heavy burden on youth. Precocity occasionally prevails, but its necessary lack of seasoning often makes the future more difficult.

However, Creamy wears his glittering pro crown well, Shute is steadily rising as a golf star, and Vines—menaced only by what has been frail health—is the calm mental type which is substantial rather than the mere flash.

Yes, youth is being served in most of our major sport activities, that glorious victory of Francis Ouimet in golf's National Amateur to the contrary notwithstanding. Indeed, Ouimet's win might be construed as a happy return of youth to that splendid veteran!
